

Libre Application Summit

Hosted by GNOME

May 16 – 20, 2016 | Portland, Oregon

Libre Application Summit is a new Free Software / Open Source conference around a new concept. For long standing, potential developers when they wanted to develop an application; they had to decide which Linux distributions they wanted to develop against, and create a complex build environments to support many packaging formats.

Located at the Eliot Center, this one of a kind conference will bring together over a 100 free and open source developers from application writers, designers, and toolkit developers to hardware manufacturers collaborating on improving finally the application story that has been long in coming. Ubiquitous applications running on any Linux distribution and a new application distribution model that developers control not others.

GNOME's runtime and sandboxing technology will allow developers to target a runtime that can run anywhere instead of a distribution. This concept goes beyond use in the desktop but around any application that need a fixed environment to run under.

To make this conference successful, we need your help! Your sponsorship will help drive the kind of collaboration that is needed to make application development successful in the Linux eco-system. The Open Source model has enjoyed tremendous success in so many market segments. But the application story has languished for twenty years. This conference is the first of its kind to tackle this story and build a new emerging and measurable market segment for entrepreneurs, companies, and startups.
